

Dear Mike,

Thank you so much for your entertaining and meaningful presentation, "Can I Kiss You?" on November 11, 2003. Having never seen your program before, I was not entirely sure what to expect. But once you started speaking, I knew I had made a great decision in bringing you onto campus.

I could tell the students were tuned into you from the moment you stepped on stage. You had them laughing and even volunteering for role-plays. When your discussion took a more serious turn, there wasn't a cough or a sneeze or a rustle of clothing in the room. That is a tell-tale sign that everyone was paying attention to what you had to say.

While I enjoyed what you had to say, the important thing is...did the students? Well, below are a few comments I've pulled, with their permission, from the evaluation forms. I think students truly say it best.

Kyle Payne, sophomore, enjoyed the real-life examples, "he stated his case for 'respect' and 'taking the time to care' very well. As a member of SASA (Sexual Assault Student Advocates) and ROCC (Reshaping Our Campus Community), I thought it [Mike's lecture] would play a tremendous role in furthering my understanding of issues such as body language, dating abuse, and respect. Also, I just think it was about issues that many people ignore (but everyone should know), and I thought Mike did an incredible job!"

David Batchelder, junior, said, "Mike was hilarious. He had a way of getting people to realize how silly some of the things we do are."

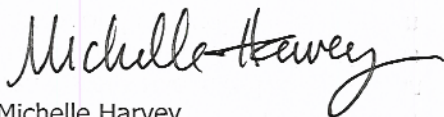

Tom Stewart, junior, said "I enjoyed the appropriate message of respect that he conveyed, and how he dispelled myths and rumors about expectations that each sex has regarding their roles in relationships."

Becky Dewey, sophomore, suggested, "Make it longer and talk about more things. Mike has our attention, why not keep it a little longer."

Another thing I thoroughly enjoyed about "Can I Kiss You?" was the endless promotional possibility! I had a great time coming up with clever, attention-getting techniques. Thanks for the opportunity to be creative!

I would be happy to talk with anyone about your presentation in the event they are considering inviting you to their campus. I can be reached in the student services office at Buena Vista University at 712.749.2123 or through email, harvey@m@bv.u.edu.
